Contextualization Notes

This piece was written originally for Madison Bjorkman's senior recital, given she, a clarinetist, wanted to duet a violin with a piece that was lyrical and told a story. In the construction of the piece, rarely it was thought that the piece should capture a story, that it should be something like a love story, a battle cry, or a plea for understanding. What was being focused on during the process was that a story was being told whenever the piece is played. What the piece needed to do was the action of telling a story, what the story is, is determined by the conditions made by performer, audience, and everything that contributes to the music.
